Heather and her husband were married in 2009 and they wanted to have children. But after a year of trying to get pregnant with no success, they started to worry. When the family moved to West Virginia, Heather went online and researched fertility specialists in the area. Listed among the top-rated physicians, she found Pickens Gantt, MD, at the Fertility Center.

Due to what was discovered to be a rare chromosomal abnormality, Heather’s husband had a low sperm count and conception would be difficult for the couple. Based on his 30 years of experience and what research was available, Dr. Gantt recommended Heather and her husband try in vitro fertilization (IVF).

On July 2, 2013, Heather got the call she and her husband had been hoping for. “Dr. Gantt said, ‘You did it.’ I’ll never forget that phone call,” Heather says. Nine months later, Kaitlyn was born at CAMC Women and Children’s Hospital – 8 pounds, 13 ounces.

Dr. Gantt and the expert fertility team understand the frustrations of infertility and are equipped to offer advanced reproductive services in a compassionate, caring environment.
